2	Courses/lectures	S: Current topics in labor market policy (3 SWS)	5 ECTS
3	Lecturers	Prof. Fitzenberger
4	Module coordinator	Prof. Fitzenberger
5	Contents	Labor economics is a field with high policy relevance. The seminar on current topics in labor market policy focuses on current developments in the labor market and policy responses. At the beginning of the semester there will be an introduction into the theoretical basis and the policy context of the topics covered in the seminar.
6	Learning objectives and skills	The seminar allows students to acquire experience on how to use economic theory, data analysis, and empirical methods to analyze current topics in labor economics and labor market problems. Students learn how to profoundly discuss policy issues and to assess policy proposals. Students also learn how to write a structured thesis on a subject in economic policy. The seminar, in addition, provides the opportunity to practice and develop further discussion and presentation skills.
7	Recommended prerequisites	Recommended for students in their fifth or sixth semester. Successful completion of elementary courses in economics such as Mikroökonomie (Microeconomics) and Makroökonomie (Macroeconomics) and in Statistics and Regression Analysis is expected. A course in labor economics is recommended.
